

BELGIUM 1940

The Belgian Chasseur Ardennais Platoon had a different structure to the regular infantry and fought fiercely against the Germans, notably against Rommel's 7th Division. As there is some discussion on whether they should be Elite or Regular both options are provided.

D.B.T. LANCE GRENADES

The 50mm D.B.T. launcher has a minimum range of 24" and no maximum range, but closer than that the crew may use their rifles. It may target any unit which can be seen by friendly troops but it counts any target which it can see as being in close range, and it cannot see as being at effective range.

In the first round of fire at a target (even one it has fired at previously) it will roll half of the normal firepower dice. The D.B.T. is pre-dominantly armed with H.E. shells, but does have some smoke rounds. Any D.B.T launcher rolling a 1 or 2 when firing smoke will run out of smoke rounds.

ÉCLAIREURS CYCLISTES

This unit is made up of six riflemen and a Sergeant Junior Leader. They are equipped with one motorcycle each. Motorcycles operate as wheeled vehicles but re-roll any 1's rolled.

If two of these support options are selected a Sergeant-Chef Senior Leader and a VB grenadier may be added on a further two motorcycles.

7.6CM MORTARS WITH FOO

With four mortars present in the battery, a Belgian mortar bombardment covers a square area 14" by 14" with the aiming point at the centre.

THE BELGIAN ARSENAL TABLE

BELGIAN NATIONAL CHARACTERISTICS

DE SPRONG OR PRESSION TOUJOURS

The Belgian Army of the 1930s placed much emphasis on "incessant pressure" or a continuous advance in the face of the enemy, stopping to engage their foe with firepower only when the advance could not be facilitated by further advances against weak points in the line. Infantry were trained to advance by rushes, with individual teams advancing whilst covered by their comrades, the whole force leapfrogging forward in a ceaseless advance.

To reflect this emphasis, a Belgian team may move with 2D6 and then assume a Tactical stance when activated by a Leader using two Command Initiatives.

LAAT ELK SCHOT TELLEN! OR VISER SOIGNEUSEMENT!

With a strategic imperative for the defence, the Belgian Army placed much emphasis on the accuracy of long-range musketry as a means of holding an enemy at a distance. To reflect this, a Belgian rifle Team firing at Effective range may treat the target as Close range when activated by a Leader using two Command Initiatives.
