Danish National characteristics

Madsen M27 MMG teams count as seven dice due to increased stability in the sustained fire role however, being tripod mounted the weapon loses the ability to move and fire. This then provides a reason to use the tripod as they did historically in the game mechanics.

Some support choice most notably the armoured cars have been moved to a higher cost to reflect their rarity.

Bicycle rifle sections are as per normal infantry section strength wise.

Nimbus 20mm section, the second MC combo carries the ammunition and other two crew members.

Koncentreret ild (Concentred fire)

With a strategy based solely for the defence and with limited man-power as a nation the Danish Army placed much emphasis on the accuracy of long-range musketry as a means of holding an enemy at a distance. To reflect this, a Danish infantry sections firing at Effective range may treat the target as Close range when activated by a Leader using two Command Initiatives.

Fløjte kommandoer (Whistle commands)

With limited communications equipment and a strategy based on defensive actions Danish leaders made much use of hand signals and whistles to coordinate squad actions. The command range of Danish Leaders is increased by 3 inch when the sections or teams they are commanding are stationary and within line of sight.
