

CHAIN OF COMMAND

Late War Hungarians (Hungary 1944-45)

By the late part of the war, the Hungarian Army had undertaken a number of reforms, based on the lessons learned from its 1943 humiliation in Russia.

Whilst outnumbered, the Hungarians benefit from access to some German armour, and their own weapons development has started to bear fruit.

HUNGARIAN NATIONAL CHARACTERISTICS

ELITE OFFICERS

The Hungarian Army had highly trained officers, backed by the cultural and military heritage of being the bulwark of Christendom against invasions from the East for many hundreds of years.

To represent this, when an officer uses two command initiatives to remove shock from a Team that they are attached to, they may choose to remove an additional point.

SONS OF THE HUSSARS

The mounted Hussars were considered reckless, almost fearless warriors, renowned for harassing enemy skirmishers and overrunning artillery positions. These traditions have been inherited by the Hungarian armoured formations, with aggression and bravery making up for any deficit in technology.

To represent this, some vehicles benefit from extra movement when moving 'flat-out'. Average speed vehicles must move a total of 1" extra (not per die), and Fast vehicles, a total of 2" extra.

SUPPORT OPTIONS

MACE THROWER

A dual rocket-propelled, shaped charge launcher, typically mounted on captured Soviet wheeled machine gun mounts. Its translation is approximately "mace thrower".

It can fire two types of warhead, the "Buzogány" (mace) anti-tank round that could penetrate 300mm of armour, and the "Zápor" (shower, rainfall) anti-personnel round. Maximum range is 2,000m, though effective range is capped at around 1,200m.

It has a crew of three, but does not have a gun shield. It suffers from back-blast and has limited ammunition (three), but may re-supply from a friendly Jump-Off point.

50MM MORTAR TEAM

The 50mm mortar has no smoke rounds and only fires High Explosive ammunition. It has a minimum range of 12", but closer than that the crew may use their rifles.
